Young Oxford: (From the Salurday Review) A philosopher once remarked that, if we were but permitted to learn the opinions and feeling of the young men of the day; he could tell what England would be at the distance of a generation It was not a very wise or a very true remark, for the England of each generation is a good deal larger and wider, and perhaps also a little stupider [THE] Corner HOUSE No. 2, Pedder's His and more nig-headed, then any set of young men is likely to be at any time. The commonest exporience, too, teaches that young men change their opinions very freely and fast; and few can recognise, in the meek, domestic, humilrum restar of forty, the noisy, dressy, flery Union orator of twenty. Young men, too, are not at all alike Couses which no one has pretended by analyse separately. Very desirable re-idences. have produced between the young mon of Oxford and the young men of Cambridge a difference of the most marked kind, and this difference has now neavailed for at least thirty years. Oxford and Cambridge men come for the most part from the same schools and the same classes of society, are intended for the same prof spions, and pursue substantially the came studies. And yet the Oxford man is quite unlike, the Cambridge man. The former vexes bimself with all manner of difficu't questions, has views, believes in new opinions, and thinks it no more than simple justice to himself to be in search of a creed. The Cambridge man is perfectly at case on all these things. He is always within the safe region of common sense, cares little for political and theological disputes, or if he strays into theology, seriou ly believes or maintains that every difficulty of other prople may be solved by a persistent aturly of the Greek particles in the New Testament, It is impossible that the England of twenty years hence should be like both of these incongrous sets of young men. And yet both sets are excellent creatures in their own way, and the elements which they will contribute to the England of the future will be very valuable. If the speculations of the | . on the Praya Grands, facing the Public Oxford man, being generally either paradoxical or Garden, and lately occupied by the Peruvian roundhand, do not come to much positive fruit, yet | Consul. The Rouse is in excellent reput; and they widen the sympathies, enlarge the tastes, contains 11 Lofty and Spacious Rioms, with quicken the sensibilities, and sometimes sharpen the judgment of those who pursus them. The Cambridge man, on the other hand, with his belief. in the tripuses, his practical acomen, and even his anaviction that all moral and spiritual problems may be unravelled by the unrausitting us of a lexicon, pours a large and constant tributary stream into that wast basin of common sense which is the source of life and bealth to England. We must not, therefore, attach either too little or too much importance to the vagaries of gentlemanly lads when we occasionally take the trouble to ask what is the ntevailing fashion of thought and life at either of our Universitien; uni es the Oxford mind is the most varying, the most mobils, the most plastic of the two, we have generally to turn to Oxford when we want to conw the last new thing among undergraduates. Whatever it may be, we may be sure that it does not happen without a cause that affects the nation at large, and that indicates a current of thought from which those who look on undergraduates as hove cannot pretend to stand shoof. . The last new thing at Oxford is, however, quite nathunding, even to those who thought they knew that University well. That young men will he voung mon is an old saying, but it is something quite new to hear that young men will be ald women. The present fancy of Oxford is for vestments. Strong young men- with whinkers and big arms and fat calves, men who are also fond of taking an ear or a hat in their hards, actually go in with a girlish delight for dressing themselves up in the quaintest, the richret, the most expensive ecolesisation garments They do not appear to trouble themselves with the inquiry whether any sect has as yet required this its lay members should habitually wear the most girgeous and slaborate cistume of the highand acclesiastive. They simply form themselves into a holy brotherhood, and settle that the brethree shall wear something as splendilles fancy oin suggest and money can buy. A lively disregard of egonomy, and, we may add, of the purnoses for which their parents pay for their going to college, is displayed in their arrangements for pontifical costume. The room in which one very precions set of yestments is stored is said, in the dark rumours of undergraduates, to be inaired for thousands and thousands of pounds. A and of celestial bagman goes round on behalf of a estellisted millinery warshingse, touting for orders. A publisher has a secret and sacred o mer. in his shop where every information on costame can for Offices, and hav been reo in ly occurred by he obtained. And what is the most strange part Mosers Jaroune, Matheson & O. Ales at the of all is that this fancy prevails most ficiosly, and same place, on the PIRST FLOOR, a suite of is cratified most lavishly, in the college which has THREE BOOMS, with BATH R. JOM actiched, ast itself up for being the most intellectual in suitable either for a Dwelling, or Offices. The On Palinies not ex-Oxford—the college which considers the claralist whole, or part, can be let to meet the require- couding I month . almost its own, where the tutors are supposed to ments of applicants. batha best in Oxford, and to see their some in which, has long been thought a privilege by hundrade of anxious perents. But throughout the University there is more or less of this dericature of vitualism. Young men walk about the Highstreet with garments and head-dresses on that give the initiated to understand that their wearers are as much princts as it is possible for young laymen to be. And, naturally, the appropriate the Bank of Hindustan, Uhina, and Japan. The theology prevails also, Undergraduate after na- principal building is very suitable for division dergraduate announces that he is restored to the into Offices or Chambers bosom of the true Church; and as under the modern system Raman Catholics are allowed to be can go over when he pleases, and yet pursue his University career. Some, however still hesitate. and to one of these a namphlet has lately be midraged by a professed Oatholic, which is not in tended indeed to convince the vulgar, but which the writer feels sure his friend, who " is neither " Protestant upr a Pantheist," will appreciate. The University, or at least a part, large or small, of the lunior members of the University, is in a | I water frontage. Apply to P. & A. C. UAHAtemporary state of great excitement; and, as is JEE & Oo, niways the case, this excitement takes various form!. Gambling on a soule previously auknown

is said to have come in with this queer parody of ritualism, and epigrammatists remark that it is either mas or unlimited low. Not that we would wish it to be understood that the ritualists are numblers, for it would be very unfair to any so; has the undergraduate world is feverish just now, feet and high play and high dressing are symptoms of the same excitement. - . There is not much to be feared in all this. We cannot help being very corry for the parents whose sons are thus hewildering themselves, and wasting time and money. Their sons are getting GRANITE GODOWNS on Marine Lot No. none of those things at Oxford which they were . 715, at Wanchi, baving Water frontage and sent to get. A man whose head is full of violet about 25,000 Picula holding capacity for one or satin and gold lace count oars much for classics | two. or mathematica. But otherwise there will be no great harm done. In a year's time we may hope undergraduates will once more care for little mura than that their shooting-coats shall be of an easy fit, and will one a more play contentedly for sixnences. If any prophecy may be safely hazarded. it is that young Englishmen will not long trouble themselves about millinery, or even about the theory on which millinery is supposed to repose. But it is somewhat disappointing and somewhat instructive to find that, at the present day, such a queer fit of unreason is possible in some of the hest Colleges of an English University. Oxford men must admire and envy the grand, unvarying common-sense of Cambridge, which goes on year after year like the trade-winds in the Gulf Stream, and makes such extravagences impossible there. At Oxford everything varies, and thought and wisdom neither there nor elsewhere go on in a straight line. It certainly seems, after the two great movements of Oxford—the High Church movement and the Liberal movement-a strange bithos to rink to there nucrilities of gargeous bratherhoods. No one has expressed a more fervent contempt than Dr. Newman himself for what he calls the rilt gingarbread school, of which this man-millinery achool is the latest offset; and those whocan remember the fervour, the modesty, the learning, the intellectual power, as well as the picty of the leaders of the old High Church movement, will wonder how even a traverty of their opinions can have taken this staring, frisky, fantastical shape. The worst of all silly extravagances i religion is, however, that they usually promote a strong reaction against all religious; and the University a year or two hence may have to guard their own Bonts, and to receive the same on Storvery anxiously against the demoralisation which age in first d'ass GRANITE GODOWSS on there good, will-intentioned, splendid by-priests moderate tarms. will have left behind them. At any rate it cannot be doubted that, in the larger theatre of the cutside world, the ordinary Englishman, the com-Placent, church-going, tolerably benevolent tex-paver, would be quickly potrified into indifference, or irritated into enmity; if religion come before him in the shape which it assumes among the lea lers of Young Oxfor !. But the reaction, if it comes will be only temporary; and before long the whole effects of the present excitement will have died TWO or three ROOMS suitable for an Office that Young Oxford may one more occupy itself Particulars apply to with the works o great writers and the thought:
